

Ugandan Households: A Study of Parenting Practices in Three Districts

Ugandan households play a central role in child care and protection, yet the way social interactions with parents or other caretakers protect children from adversities has not been thoroughly researched. This study was designed to identify community perceptions of protective and harmful parenting practices in three districts in Uganda. It employed free-listing interviews to determine priorities and practices important in providing care and protection to children. Findings suggest that parenting practices can be grouped into seven basic themes, including:

- Ugandan Households: A Study of Parenting Practices in Three Districts

Ugandan Households: A Study of Parenting Practices in Three Districts

Ugandan Households: A Study of Parenting Practices in Three Districts

AfriChild Centre for the Study of the African Child, Makerere University, Kampala, Uganda, and the Mailman School of Public Health, Columbia University, New York, USA

Title: The effect of educational intervention on shaping safe sexual behaviour based on problem-based pedagogy in the field of sex education and reproductive health: clinical trial among adolescents in Tanzania

Author (s): The AfriChild Centre for the Study of the African Child, Makerere University, Kampala, Uganda, and the Mailman School of Public Health, Columbia University, New York, USA

Year of Publication: 2015

Access Resource Here: